With a distinguished panel of members from the local and regional investment community, the “Small Business and Venture Capital for Microproducts” round table promises to be a lively and interactive session. Discussions will be moderated to encourage audience participation and be directed toward gaining a clear view of the investment landscape and investor expectations for the microproducts and nanotechnology industry. We will seek to gain advice on investor areas of focus, mechanisms and requirements of financing, and how state and local government and academic institutions can help in creating a vital environment able to successfully attract venture capital investments for small businesses in the area.
