

Transition of Technology from R&D to Manufacturing

Michael O'Halloran
IDC
Portland, OR

The transition of new technology from research and development (R&D) to high-volume manufacturing involves the successful resolution of multiple issues. This presentation will review issues associated with financing, personnel and schedule. A conceptual model of the requirements for successful technology transition will be developed from the review. The presenter will propose a key focus area for commercialization effort.